

Dear Sirs,

It is incredible to me that you would be considering a proposal to preempt the Indiana State Telephone Privacy laws for a lower national standard. Let us not get technical but be practical. My telephone is for my use and convenience only. I pay for the phone, not the solicitors. It is not for someone else to intrude into my home during dinner, while conversing with friends, while watching a favorite television show, reading a book, etc. These intrusions are truly annoying and offensive.

Since the Indiana State Telephone Privacy laws have taken affect, we have received no calls and as a result left my phone to my use not someone else's. We use to get 10-12 calls a week. If I wanted phone solicitor's help or products I would not have put my name on the list. I have always been lead to believe that I have the right to privacy in my own home. I truly do not understand or comprehend how the FCC could remotely even think of taking this right away from me.

People have a right to sell things but they do have the right to invade the privacy of my home unless invited.

Since the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law, the quality of our time at home has improved immensely. The unwanted calls were constant, annoying and intrusive. Now we have peace.

Therefore:

- The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law protections.
- The FCC should respect the privacy of citizens and there wishes
- The FCC is a government office for the people; listen to what the people want

Your responsibility as a government agency is to protect us, reflect our wishes and improve our quality of life as is most government agencies. You must do so and leave our Indiana Telephone Privacy Laws alone.

Sincerely,
